PREFACE.

THE assistance of the nobility and landed gentry who have so liberally supplied me with information for this volume has added much to my pleasure in bringing it before the public.

As they have largely subscribed to the work, this is the most favourable opportunity for expressing my gratitude to them, not only for so kindly assisting me in collecting together the extent of their several estates in Ireland, but also for supplying the other necessary statements for this publication.

As this book is, I believe, the first of its kind published, it may be desirable that its object should be here stated, notwithstanding that the prospectus was so fully and favourably commented upon in the public press.

Its chief objects are:—To give an opportunity anxiously looked for by many landlords to correct erroneous statements which appeared in the late Government Returns in reference to their properties. To show at a glance the extent of their estates in all Ireland and in each county. And to include in one alphabetical list the names of every landowner of over a certain stated acreage or valuation in Ireland, with a record of the titles, education, clubs and residences of each landowner, as well as the return of his several estates, collected together, and arranged alphabetically under his name.

It has been suggested by some of my subscribers that I should show what is the relative proportion which the rental generally bears to the Government valuation in various parts of the country. I do not, however, intend entering so thoroughly into the subject as this would necessitate. I shall only state for those who may not be acquainted with the subject that the Government valuation, which appears in this work, was made within the last thirty years, and was calculated at twenty-five per cent. below the letting value of the land; in other words, the letting value was one-third above the Government valuation. The increasing wealth of the country has, however, as a rule, raised the letting value, and it might now be found in numerous instances to be one and a-half times the amount of the valuation. But it should be remembered that although land may be gradually increasing in value the tenants' rent is not frequently altered; and for this reason, the total rentals of large estates may be found to be but a little increased since the Government valuation was made.

The term Landowner, as used in the title of this work, applies only to owners, as it does in the Government Returns of 1876, whose tenure is not less than 99 years' lease (unless with perpetual right of renewal), and therefore it should be remembered that superior landlords who have let land on such terms, are not entitled to have it returned under their names. But as this rule might in some cases exclude a considerable portion of a landlord's property, the acreage of such estates (if any) with the annual rents or head-rents, due to the superior landlord, have been inserted under his name, whenever the information was ascertainable, as for example, see Marquis of Donegall, Earl of Normanton, &c.

It would be difficult to convey any idea of the labour necessary to compile this work, without resorting to figures and explanations, which would be more tedious than interesting to most of its readers; but without doing so, I hope subscribers and the public will kindly pardon any inaccuracies that they may observe, and believe that I have endeavoured to place before them what I trust is a useful and interesting volume.

U. H. HUSSEY DE BURGH,

DUBLIN, August 1878.
